A Ruined Republic.

A Ruined Republic.

Oh, dear me suds! What a great todo is being made about protection and tariff! One minute you are convinced that if the tariff don't stay on you might as well wind up your business and quit, and the very next minute you are just as certain that if it don't go off very soon the foundations of this giorious republic of ours will crumble at their base and the structure builded by our fathers will come tumbling about our ears—a mighty ruin. We have been lying awake nights on this thing, and now have it all figured out.
What you want is "protection of American homes;" that is to say, you want your home protected against bad surroundings and squalid neighboring houses. You want a nice clean neighborhood, built up after architectural models of the present day. When your nice home is finished you don't want to look through your plate-glass windows into neighboring yards decerated with empty cans and other rubbish.
What you want is to have every house and every yard around you just as good as yours. Now, that's protection that protects; and that is what you want.
We want a little sug—deep pardon) tariff, in ourn. Not much, but just snough to keep the coyotes from the door, and to enable us to carry out our plan for surface improvements in popperton which in the sweet bye and bye will make it just a little bit the loveliest home place in this sinful and sad old world.
